

Taking on disability at Bialik

BIALIK College's middle school recently enjoyed a day dedicated to fun challenges as a tool to learn about people living with disabilities.

The Diffability Day was conceived and developed by the students themselves to complement their regular health and wellbeing days.

All the sessions were educational and encouraged the students to think about diversity and acceptance as well as giving them a greater understanding of the issues facing people with a disability when playing sport.

They played sport while using a wheelchair and took part in a game that is played by blind and vision-impaired people that relies on hearing and tactile senses.

Jamie Roth and Ari Feldman at Bialik College's Diffability Day.