

Glanc is back with a new show

DANIEL SHANDLER

COMEDIAN Joshua Glanc is following up his recent success with a new solo show, Manfül, which premieres at the Melbourne Fringe festival next week.

Manfül is set around a Jewish man named Dicky Rosenthal who arrives from the United States to run a seminar.

"It's pretty full on – there's nudity and mature content, but it's a lot of fun," says

Glanc, adding that Manfül is in a similar vein to his solo show, 99 Schnitzels (Veal Ain't One), which he performed at last year's Melbourne International Comedy Festival.

"I'm trying to have the same sense of fun and silliness as Schnitzels, but maybe a little bit more risqué."

The lawyer and Bialik College graduate is ensuring his new show has more of a storyline than some of his earlier shows.

"I'm dealing with issues about identity and masculinity and the pressure to feel like particular people," he says. "As it's a new show, there's a huge amount of preparation which you need to be on top of."

Manfül is at Errol's, 69 Errol St, North Melbourne from September 16 to October 1.

Comedian Joshua Glanc.