

Conference for Cultures of Thinking

ZOE KRON

BIALIK College recently hosted the fifth International Cultures of Thinking Conference, where more than 400 national and international delegates shared insights on the contemporary and innovative teaching model.

Bialik, which has hosted the event every second year since its inception, welcomed keynote speakers from Harvard University's Project Zero David Perkins, Ron Ritchhart and Mark Church, who presented on "How Can Teachers Inspire Students' Thinking and Empower Them to Become Leaders in an Ever-Changing World?"

In addition, 35 Bialik teachers gave presentations on their teaching methods, delivering mini-courses and panel presentations for the guests.

At the conclusion of the conference, Bialik's teachers hosted more than 150 contemporaries and leaders for a day of observation to demonstrate their teaching methods.

College principal Jeremy

Stowe-Lindner expressed his "pride" at the school leading the way in the "educational world".

He said, "We were proud to host over 400 educators from four continents. Professor David Perkins referred to Bialik College as 'the mother-ship' for the Cultures of Thinking across the globe. Since its inception, our relationship with the University of Harvard has resulted in the promotion of the Thinking curriculum in thousands of schools worldwide."
